“Mister Gorbachev, tear down this wall”-Ronald Regan. How we chose the Berlin Wall was by listening to our teacher talk about topics, and we were already interested in it. When we heard him say the Berlin Wall we knew it was perfect It would fit well because of how the wall divided people and how the people got together to take it down. The Berlin Wall was a terrible addition to Berlin because it kept people from their jobs, family, and friends by forbidding crossing from East to West Berlin.

During NHD we did a lot of research in different places including the internet, and the library. The first place we looked at was the internet. At first, we just looked up the Berlin Wall. We then looked up documents and newspapers about the Berlin Wall to find more primary sources. The next place that we looked for sources was the library. We looked at all of the books on the Berlin Wall and found some interesting things like timelines and quotes. To summarize, we found some great information both on the internet and in books.

When we created this project we organized color and tabs along with the information into short neat sections and we had a lot of problems in the process. First, we put the tabs in a way so they were easy to access. We put the tabs in the same order on every page and so people know where to look. We then added different colors that look good and stand out. Lastly, we had many problems when trying to finish the project. We had to overcome maneuvering the website. We did a lot of trial and error when trying to put things on my websites. All in all, we conducted our project in great ways while overcoming problems.

This is topic fits the NHD theme this year properly in a multitude of ways including the Berlin Wall falling and the sides helping each other. First, the wall fits the topic perfectly because it itself was a physical barrier and the Berliners had to break this barrier in history. Next, the barrier between the relationship between East and West Berliners was broken when the west would send in supplies and food to East Berlin. In conclusion, the Berlin Wall was a perfect fit for this year's NHD theme.

Finally, we learned many things during this project. Some things turned out well and did not. First, we learned about teamwork, because we got together to make 1 project, and decided what goes on our project. We really liked the way our project turned out, but we did not like our bibliography because we were hoping we had more sources. To summarize, we were happy with some things but unhappy with others while learning a lot. The Berlin Wall was a terrible addition to Berlin because it kept people from their jobs, family, and friends by forbidding crossing from East to West Berlin.
